PLEADING CYCLE ESTABLISHED

COMMENTS: July 18, 2002

REPLY COMMENTS: August 2, 2002

The Federal Communications Commission recently commissioned a study regarding the extent to which different levels of horizontal concentration among multichannel video program distributors (“MVPDs”) might affect the flow of video programming to consumers. The study utilized the methodology of experimental economics, which examines economic interactions among market participants in controlled laboratory settings. The study simulated a market environment in which buyers, implicitly representing cable and direct broadcast satellite distributors of multi-channel video programming, and sellers, implicitly representing programming networks, purchased and sold goods, representing programming, negotiated trades, implicitly representing affiliate fees that grant MVPDs the right to distribute the sellers’ programming.

The Media Bureau is seeking comment on the study report, attached hereto, which is being released concurrently by the Office of Plans and Policy as OPP Working Paper No. 35, “Horizontal Concentration in the Cable Television Industry: An Experimental Analysis” by Mark Bykowsky, Anthony M. Kwasnica and William Sharkey (“Working Paper”).¹

Specifically, interested parties are asked to comment on the value of the study in providing empirical evidence relevant to the ownership issues raised in the Commission’s pending cable ownership rulemaking proceeding² and the AT&T/Comcast license transfer proceeding.³ Interested parties also are asked to address the study's conceptualization, underlying assumptions, design, and methodology. Finally, interested parties are encouraged to examine the released data and draw their own conclusions, to explore additional avenues of research, and to consider further studies or analyses and submit their findings to the Commission in the interest of developing a complete evidentiary record and resolving the complicated issues posed by adoption of general ownership standards and grant of specific ownership approvals.

Interested parties may file comments on the Working Paper on or before July 18, 2002, and may file reply comments on or before August 2, 2002.
