WASHINGTON, November 16, 2022—The Federal Communications Commission today announced it is committing nearly $84 million in a new funding round through the Emergency Connectivity Program, which provides digital services for students in communities across the country. Today’s funding commitments support applications from all three application windows, benefitting approximately 140,000 students across the country, including students in California, Georgia, Iowa, North Carolina, Minnesota, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania and South Carolina.

“For a successful education, every student needs after-school access to digital tools for doing homework and engaging with teachers,” said Chairwoman Rosenworcel. “This latest round of funding brings us closer to the goal of closing the Homework Gap.”

To date, the Commission has committed over $6.3 billion to schools and libraries across the country as part of the Emergency Connectivity Program, which launched last year. The program has provided schools and libraries three different “application windows” for schools and libraries to apply for support. Today’s announcement will support over 180 schools, 20 libraries, and 5 consortia.

The funding can be used to support off-campus learning, such as nightly homework, to ensure students across the country have the necessary support to keep up with their education. To date, the program has provided support to approximately 10,500 schools, 1,000 libraries, and 100 consortia, and providing over 12 million connected devices and over 7 million broadband connections. Of the over $6.3 billion in funding commitments approved to date, approximately $4.1 billion is supporting applications from Window 1; $833 million from Window 2; and $1.4 billion from Window 3.
